NO AND LOW COST STEPS TO INCREASE YOUR HOME'S ENERGY EFFICIENCY

As we prepare for the busy heating season ahead, we would like to take a moment to point out some heating related information. Here are some no and low cost steps to increase your home's energy

1. Change your furnace filter regularly. Spending a little on a new filter will go a long way toward maintaining the efficiency of your furnace.
2. Keep the area near registers, radiators, air returns and baseboards clear. Vacuum or dust radiators and baseboards often and be sure they're not blocked by furniture and carpets. Heat needs to circulate to reach all areas of the house, especially with a forced air system.
3. Lower your thermostat. By lowering the thermostat when nobody is home or when your sleeping, you can cut your winter heating bills significantly. For each degree you turn the thermostat down in the winter (around the clock) you save roughly three percent on your bill. Programmable thermostats can also offer up to 15 percent savings over a heating season if you set the thermostat 10 degrees lower while you're sleeping or out of the house.
4. Check for drafts and seal them up. If your house feels dry during the heating season, it's probably because it is drafty.
5. Think twice about electric space heaters. Even with higher gas and oil prices, electricity remains the most expensive way to heat a home. A thermostatically controlled 1.5kw electric space heater can increase energy cost by as much as $50 per month.
